

EU, UK Concerned About Press Freedom in China

The European Union and the UK are voicing concerns over freedom of the press in China, coming after two European journalists were forced to leave the country.

One of China's latest efforts to defend its actions in the Xinjiang region may have just backfired. A Xinjiang resident praising the internment camps appears to have been outed as a fake.

Shanghai is tightening up public control. Anyone who stays in the city for more than 24 hours must report to authorities.

Worries escalate over the global supply chain of microchips, as suppliers become more concentrated in certain regions, with Taiwan leading them. A possible crisis there could put the production of everyday products like smartphones, refrigerators, and microwaves at risk.

And the Chinese regime is ramping up efforts to challenge the U.S. dollar's dominance. But experts say that's not likely to happen anytime soon.

Subscribe to our YouTube channel for more first-hand news from China.

For more news and videos, please visit our website and Twitter.